Suicide Prevention in East Belfast

Introduction

Suicide is something that we can all help to prevent. This booklet provides some basic information which could help to save the life of someone in crisis.

Please keep this booklet. Even if you don't think it is relevant to you there may be a time in the future when you, or someone you know, may need information on suicide prevention and support services.

It also provides information on the support that is available to anyone who has been bereaved by suicide.

In 2013 the Community Response Plan to suicide for East Belfast was launched. The plan aims to support individuals, families and communities following a suicide.

Suicide - who is at risk?

Anyone can experience thoughts of suicide and it can happen at any stage in a person's life.

There are some times when people may be at higher risk of feeling suicidal, including:

- If they are experiencing a mental health issue such as depression or anxiety;
- If they are dealing with big changes in their life, e.g.: relationship breakup, moving home, redundancy or retirement;
- People who are abusing drugs and alcohol;
- People who are marginalised due to their sexuality, ethnic background or disability;
- If they are dealing with a traumatic event such as abuse, bullying or bereavement;
- If they have easy access to a means of attempting suicide such as firearms or large quantities of prescription drugs;
- If they are trying to cope with their problems on their own without asking for help or talking to someone about how they feel.

How do I know if someone is at risk of suicide?

People who are thinking about suicide may behave in very different ways.

Some will talk openly about how they are feeling and ask for help.

Others may try to hide the signs that they are feeling suicidal. If someone puts on a 'brave face' it can be more difficult to see the warning signs, but there may be clues in the things they say or do.

Make yourself aware of the warning signs and look out for them in the people around you. The more people in our community who are doing this, the more likely that we can identify those at risk of suicide and get them the support they need.

If you see one of these warning signs don't panic - it doesn't always mean that the person is suicidal but if you are concerned follow the advice on the next page.

If you are concerned that someone you know may be suicidal, you can call Lifeline for confidential advice and support on 0808 808 8000

Look for these warning signs

Saying they feel suicidal

Saying they feel hopeless about the future

Saying they feel helpless and can't see a solution to problems

Talking about, or showing an interest in death or suicide methods

Change in personality, e.g.: quieter and more withdrawn or more angry and irritable

Increased use of alcohol or other drugs

Losing interest in things that they used to enjoy and do regularly

Not taking care of themselves, e.g.: not washing or eating properly

Not able to sleep or concentrate as normal

Sudden change in religious views and beliefs

Giving things away, especially things of importance or value to that person

Sorting out financial affairs such as making a will or planning funeral expenses

Looking for ways to harm themselves such as collecting large amounts of tablets or other items which would be used in a suicide attempt

Self-harming such as cutting or burning themselves (this doesn't always mean that the person is suicidal but it can be a sign that they are finding it difficult to cope)

How can I help?

If you think that someone may be at risk of suicide it's important that you speak to them about your concerns.

Tell them that you are worried about them and that you would like to help.

Some simple tips when helping someone who may be at risk of suicide:

Do	Don't
Take it seriously	Assume they are attention seeking
Stay calm and use a calm tone of voice	Panic
Tell them that you are concerned and want to help	Assume that someone else will deal with it
Listen	Judge the person or their feelings
Support them to seek help	Promise to keep it a secret
Talk through the options of where to get help	Impose choices on them
Get help as soon as possible	Try to deal with it on your own

Talk to someone about your concerns

Many people consider suicide at some point in their lives, but given time and the right help and support they can feel better. If you are concerned about someone take the time to talk to them and show them that you care. If they don't want to talk that's ok – just tell them that you will be there in the future if they change their mind. Sometimes it only takes a small gesture to save a life.

Even if someone is not suicidal, they should still seek help if:

- They have been feeling down and unable to enjoy life for more than two or three weeks;
- They have problems with sleeping or going about their everyday life;
- They are having difficulties coping with problems or worries in their life.

These are common signs of depression and anxiety. Your GP and the other services on the next page can help.

“When our son Greig took his own life there was a huge void in our family and we were all impacted emotionally, mentally and physically. It’s a love that doesn’t diminish, but the hurt DOES ease and the mental fog has cleared enough to let us function and love the family that we have. We have been involved with the SOS group for the past few years. To us the group has been a friend, a ‘family’ and a strength that we have been able to lean on when needed, helping us in our survival after suicide. If you have been impacted by the loss of a loved one through suicide there is support out there. Please take that step... WE DID.”
